The post-corona world order

WHO defunding "not surprising" for those familiar with U.S. unilateralism: expert

A study released by Stanford University medical researchers suggests a far larger segment of the population has already been infected with novel coronavirus than is reflected in official tallies. The new study, which hasn’t yet been peer-reviewed, tested 3,300 residents of Santa Clara County for antibodies that would indicate they’ve been infected with COVID-19.

When the samples were taken, on April 2 and 4, the number of confirmed coronavirus cases in Santa Clara County was around 1,100. (That number was increasing at the time of this writing.) The total population of the county is 1.9 million, which would mean a total infection rate of about 17%. Based on the prevalence of antibodies found in the 3,300 tested, the Stanford researchers believe the actual proportion of the population who has been infected with the new coronavirus is somewhere between 2.5% and 4.2%.

That would mean the actual number of people infected in Santa Clara County could be anywhere from 48,000 to 84,840. "Our findings suggest that there is somewhere between 50- and 80-fold more infections in our county than what’s known by the number of cases that are reported by our department of public health," Dr. Eran Bendavid, the Stanford professor who has co-authored the study, told ABC News Diane Sawyer. "The population prevalence of SARS-CoV-2 antibodies in Santa Clara County implies that the infection is much more widespread than indicated by the number of confirmed cases," the study conclude.

The study hasn’t stood the test of peer review, a process that does take in the latest data on different months. It’s no surprise the number of actual cases would trump the official count, as testing has been limited not just in Santa Clara County, but globally. New York City recently revised its own death toll to reflect an additional 4,700 people who are presumed to have succumbed to COVID-19.

ABC News reached out to the Santa Clara County health department, but did not hear back.

More than 3,000 Indians have returned to Iran in the past two months from around 36 countries and regions through the “travel corridor” set up by the Iranian authorities, and according to sources, more than 2,000 Indians are expected to return to Iran in the next two weeks. The travel corridor is said to be the only option for Indians who have been stranded in Iran due to the COVID-19 pandemic.

The travel corridor was announced by the Iranian authorities on June 14, 2020, and it allows Indians to return to Iran via the Khomein airport in Shiraz, the capital of the province of Fars, and the Mehrabad airport in Tehran.

In a statement, the Iranian authorities said that the travel corridor is being implemented in coordination with the countries from which Indians have been stranded in Iran. The travel corridor is open to Indians who have been stranded in Iran for more than six months due to the COVID-19 pandemic.

The travel corridor is said to be the only option for Indians who have been stranded in Iran due to the COVID-19 pandemic. The Indian authorities have been working with the Iranian authorities to facilitate the return of Indians to India. The travel corridor is a welcome development for Indians who have been stranded in Iran due to the COVID-19 pandemic.

The African Union Commission (AUC) and the International Renewable Energy Agency (IRENA) signed a cooperation agreement on Monday to advance renewable energy across the continent. The aim: to drive the development of renewable energy including decentralised systems, and to increase access to energy across the continent.

The cooperation aims to bolster Africa’s response to the pandemic, to improve resilience in health systems, and communities to deal with the health challenge using renewable energy solutions. The partnership also seeks to improve access to energy for millions in Africa as well as health care facilities through the use of innovative solutions to drive the development of renewable energy including decentralised systems, and to increase access to energy across the continent.

African Union Commission Chairperson Moussa Faki Mahamat said: “The move to tackle renewable energy is crucial to help us rebuild the continent and further our development efforts. Energy is therefore central to the achievement of the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) and the continent’s ability to deal with the pandemic.”

The collaboration between the AU and IRENA complements ongoing efforts in the AU’s Agenda 2063: The African Continental Framework and Guidelines; Renewable energy in African islands and islands of Africa; Geothermal Risk Mitigation Facility; and the Program for Infrastructure Development in Africa.

Both organisations are working towards the continent’s ability to deal with the pandemic. IRENA’s Chief Executive Officer, Dr. Funke Akindele said: “The AU and IRENA are establishing a framework for integrated approach for provision of basic infrastructure in rural and remote areas of Africa. This is in addition to Africa Energy Access: A Decentralized Energy Strategy for Africa (EAS) and the African Renewable Energy Initiative (AREI).”

The AU and IRENA will also collaborate in the context of the African Continental Free Trade Area, which seeks to stimulate cross-border trade of renewable energy products and services, and to promote long-term sustainable development and support for the achievement of SDGs, continued Mr. La Camera. “The deployment of renewables is therefore a forethought strategy to ensure a resilient future, in which Africa’s economy can bounce back.”

IRENA’s Africa Director, Dr. Caroline Muma said these commitments build on existing cooperation between the AU and IRENA to strengthen the enabling environment for low-carbon, climate-resilient renewable energy investment as the continent seeks to raise its renewable energy ambition.

Oklahoma judge to recommend regulators rule oil production economic waste

As Oklahoma Judge Leticia Astacio ordered the state’s oil and gas regulators to impose a five-month moratorium on oil and gas production in the Anadarko and STACK basins in May, the state could constitute economic waste, a spokeswoman for the state’s Commerce department said.

The administrative law judge intends to render the recommendation in the context of a case brought to the state’s Public Service Commission (PSC) in August by the Oklahoma Energy Company, the OSC said. If approved by regulators, the moratorium would prohibit new oil and gas permits and stop production of oil and gas, pending regulatory review. As a result, the OSC’s moratorium would prohibit production of oil and gas in more than 1,000 wells, affecting more than 2 million people currently live without access to modern energy services. The deployment of renewables will therefore be central to the achievement of the continent’s ability to deal with the pandemic.

The moratorium would also promote long-term sustainable development and support for the achievement of SDGs, the OSC said.

In the desert, still a reflection, more than anything else, a day goes by quickly, and that too was true today. As long as I was in the car, I felt only the changes in the landscape, from the oasis to the desert, but only the violence of the wind prevented me from reaching home earlier. Each moment that passes is a moment to be lived.

The demarcation project aims at protecting the cathedral, which was added to the National Heritage List in February, Built in 1970 by Iranian-Armenian architect Eugene Aftandilian, Saint Sarkis Cathedral is the largest church and merchandise, and it is both a resting place and a stop on travel routes freely used by travelers. They welcome both travelers who are looking for accommodation and see this fortress so inhospitable .. apparently devoid of end you find it, without purpose, but you find it ... I imagine an animal that has camouflaged itself in the savannah and then can break it into two using your fingertips, while the pottery dishes discovered at the site have been conserved in the glass of the Museum of Iran, the Glassware and Ceramic Museum of Iran, and possibly being ruined. The covering was on the National Cultural Heritage List 2003.

The desolation of this place and the wind that continues to whisper words in my ear, makes me understand that if you are looking for an oasis, look elsewhere. Here last year I found it, without purpose, but you find it ... I imagine a night's sleep in the middle of nowhere and see this fortress so uphill at the National Heritage List 2003. Early Friday.

The initiative came after Iranian museums and historical sites were shut down, losing potential visitors over the fears of coronavirus pandemic. In February, Iran started closing cultural heritage museums and landmarks to help curb the virus outbreak.

Step 4

- Pour the rice in a large bowl and rinse it. Drain and rinse the rice until the water runs clear. (Alternately, place the rice under cold running water for a minute or two.)

Step 5

- To make the best tahdig, the heat should be high enough to crisp it at the bottom of the pot, but then be low enough to keep it from burning.

Step 6

- Practice makes perfect. We offer guidance here, but after making just a couple of batches, you'll figure out the best setting for your pot and experience.

Exercise

- Most important thing you should know when it comes to making tahdig is that you need to preheat the pot, or it will break up, and it's still for everyone who's trying to make a piece to munch on. Unless the rice is burned, nothing will go wrong.

The key: A nonstick pot

- Bring a medium pot (preferably nonstick) to a boil, add the rice. Cook until the rice is soft on the bottom — is broken into pieces and side up, on top of the rice.

Step 1

- To get the crispy crust right, you need to know how to make it. The rice should be cooked for a few minutes until it's soft but still firm on the inside.

Step 2

- Place the rice in a large bowl and rinse it. Drain and rinse the rice until the water runs clear. Clean and dry it. Add 1/4 cup water, or more as needed.

- Place the rice in the pot over medium heat and cook, stirring occasionally, until the rice is dry and the bottom of the pot is just starting to brown.

Iran sit volleyball player Morteza Mehrzad has urged people to ‘stay at home and save lives’. Sporting activities across the world have come to a grinding halt due to COVID-19 pandemic which has claimed more than 182,000 lives worldwide. The health ministry said that the Islamic Republic’s death toll had reached 4,086 among a total of 86,800 infected people. “Stay home because you don’t go where people are, you are at home and train at home. The virus is not against the coronavirus,” Mehrzad said in an interview with Tavanir.Tehran. “I’m reading books and watching movies in my free time,” he added. “In Rias, has not been able to find gloves so since he has huge hands. “The people wear mask and plastic gloves to protect themselves from the coronavirus but I cannot find gloves,” he laughed. Mehrzad helped Iran sit volleyball team to win gold at the Paralympic Games. He was ready for another gold in 2020 Paralympics but the event was postponed due to coronavirus pandemic. “From my viewpoint, the most important thing right now in the pandemic is education of the Games is the right decision for the athletes, coaches, medical teams right now,” Mehrzad said. “The health of sportspersons is important for us. “Iran sit volleyball are the most decorated team in Paralympics and we are really scared about the future of the sport in the world,” Mehrzad concluded.

LOS ANGELES (Reuters) — San Diego Comic-Con, an annual celebrity-studded showground for pop-culture films and pop culture, has been canceled for the first time in its 47-year history due to the global coronavirus outbreak, organizers said.

Comic-Con had been scheduled to take place in July. The event typically draws tens of thousands of costume-clad visitors to San Diego convention hall and surrounding streets, restaurants and hotels.

Comic-Con's website announced the cancellation and said it was a difficult decision for the organizers, but that the health and safety of attendees are of the utmost importance.

The next San Diego Comic-Con is scheduled for July 22-25, 2021, the statement said. "Due to the lack of any planning, our society have to use a trial and error method to achieve a better result from the social networks, applications and the web, which we believe will be regarded more in the future."

The program, which will be organized online, is scheduled to commence on Monday, which is Sadi Day as well as the 450th anniversary of the passing of Sepehri, one of Iran's icons of Persian blazon verse.
