Peter Jenkins doubts U.S. would ‘soften’ approach toward China and Iran if Biden is elected president

Pandemic effect on U.S. economy will be very important factor in 2020 elections, says ex-UK ambassador to UN

American establishment has come to see China as posing a strategic threat to its interest and to which it has no viable responses. It also seems to have decided that the United States’ image of China must be improved, and that it needs to ‘soften’ its approach toward China and Iran if Biden is elected president.

A: The worsening of relations with China would be much higher in November than it was at the start of the year. This would impose serious threat as well, but Biden would be the one to make the decision to ease the threat. A: The US administration will look for negotiated solutions with the countries that have fueled U.S. resentment and fear of China.

I expect much the same to be true of the relationship with Iran. Many in the political and intellectual communities will resurface the willingness of the US regime now employs army, ‘vicious dogs’ to control and internalize the country. Instead, US should listen to its ppl, change policies, and offer the opportunity to the people of Iran to live with dignity.

He is a modest person, but his teachings are profound and have influenced millions of people around the world. A: The message of hope, love, and unity that Imam Khomeini (ra) has left behind is still very relevant today. It is a message that can bring about change in the world, and it is a message that can bring about change in Iran. The people of Iran need to listen to the message of hope that Imam Khomeini (ra) has left behind, and they need to act on it.

Presidential - Tehran

A well-known US-Iranian dissidentqw renowned for his support of violence against American protesters as a means to demonize the US President and the US government has been shot to death in the Iranian capital of Tehran.

Mir Hossein Mousavi, who co-chaired an opposition alliance that helped force former President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad from power in 2009, was killed by an unidentified assailant in his house in Tehran on Friday, according to his friend and fellow opposition leader Mehdi Karroubi.

Karroubi, who was released from prison last year under a presidential pardon, arrived at the scene of the crime and spoke with Mousavi’s family, including his wife, Masoumeh, and their daughter, Fatemeh. Karroubi said Mousavi’s death was a “blow to the Iranian people” and expressed “deep sorrow” over the loss of a man who had been “a pillar of the resistance movement”.

Karroubi, who is himself under house arrest, is a former member of the Islamic Republic’s Parliament and a former Cabinet minister.

Mousavi, 65, was born in Tehran and studied law in the US, where he lived for many years before returning to Iran. He was one of the main organizers of the huge street protests that swept through Iran in 2009 and 2010, called for the end of Ahmadinejad’s rule and demanded a free election. He was later arrested and imprisoned for his role in those protests.

Mousavi’s website, which was blocked in Iran, provided regular updates on his health and conditions in prison. The website said he had been suffering from heart problems and was on oxygen.

Karroubi said Mousavi’s death was a “blow to the Iranian people” and expressed “deep sorrow” over the loss of a man who had been “a pillar of the resistance movement”. He added that Mousavi’s death would be a “major loss” for the Iranian people.

Karroubi said that Mousavi had been a “great leader” and a “great statesman” and that he would be missed by all those who knew him. He added that Mousavi’s death was a “loss for Iran and the world”.

Iranian authorities have not yet commented on Mousavi’s death. The country’s official news agency, IRNA, reported that Mousavi had been killed in a car accident, but Karroubi said this was not true.

The website of the opposition Green Party, which Mousavi had been a member of, also posted a message of condolence, saying that Mousavi had been “a strong and brave fighter” for the rights of the Iranian people.

According to the managing director of Iran’s Agriculture and Livestock Development Ministry’s plans for the current year (March 20-21), the country’s animal feed producers have exported goods to 28 countries of Iran, has exported goods to 28 countries around the world in the first month of the current Iranian calendar year (March 20-21), more than 15% of which were exports to different Asian countries and the members of the Eurasian Economic Union (EAEU).

As reported, China accounted for over 21% of the total value of Iran’s non-oil exports to Asian countries in the mentioned period, while the top five export destinations of this province, the export value of which is over $823 million has been exported to China, Indonesia, and three African countries and a state in South America, IRENA reported.

Last year, about 39 countries were the export destinations of this province, which is an official statistic. During the mentioned period, over 3.7 million tons of goods valued at over $823 million has been exported from the Islamic Republic of Iran to these countries.

Iraqi- EAU trade exceeds $2b in 7 months

The volume of trade between Iran and the EAEU member states, including Russia, Belarus, Armenia, Kazakhstan, and Kyrgyzstan, has reached the value of $2.1 billion in the last 7 months since the implementation of the free trade agreement on the issue.

The agreement eliminates all customs duties and reduces tariffs on goods imported from these countries to zero from the beginning of the current year (March 20-21).

Prior to the implementation of the free trade agreement on the issue, the volume of trade between Iran and the EAEU member states, significantly which is a turning point for the economic impacts of the U.S. sanctions resulted in a drastic fall in the country’s animal feed imports to point that the prices of such commodities skyrocketed in the country.

It was announced that due to sanctions money transfers for about $3 million tons of corn and soybean meal were not carried out on time and so the supply of those goods were affected. As a result, the price of animal feed went up. As Majid Movafagh Ghadiri, the chairman of Iran Feed Industry Association, and in early May, announced, Iran’s animal feed imports, excluding rice, soybean meal, corn, and sunflower meal, have increased by nearly 25 percent, Khademi, the managing director of Construction and Development in Transportation Infrastructure companies (ICDFIR), said in a press conference. Iran imports over 80 percent of raw materials for feed production, according to the Iran Feed Industry Association.

Iranian- EAU trade exceeds $2b in 7 months

The value of import-exports that was estimated at $2.1 billion in the first 7 months of the current year (March 20-21) was reduced to about $1.5 billion.

Iraq’s top non-oil export destinations during this period were China with $1.95 billion worth of exports, Iran with $1.47 billion worth of imports, followed by Turkey and the Islamic Republic of Iran.

Despite the unilateral sanctions against the country, the volume of exports from different Islamic countries indicates the efforts of the authorities at the national economic sectors to develop their trade relations with other countries, he continued.

Based on the data released by the Islamic Republic of Iran Customs Administration (IRICA), the value of Iran’s non-oil trade during the first two months of the current year stood at about $3.5 billion. In the mentioned period, Iran imported $3.1 billion worth of goods, while exporting $0.4 billion, which is an indication that “we should move toward new strategies to develop trade and the country’s livestock,” he added.

Khazraie mentioned that “the official and unofficial capacity of the cargo and passenger transport fleet, which was at about 2.4 billion tons, will soon fill the demand of Iran’s domestic and foreign borders with the neighbors in addition to the economic impacts of the U.S. sanctions resulted in a drastic fall in the country’s animal feed imports to point that the prices of such commodities skyrocketed in the country.

Compared to its imports from those states, exports can be even more expanded. Iran and Eurasian Economic Union reached a free trade agreement in October 2018 based on which about 8,000 commodity items were partly subjected to preferential tariffs.

The interim agreement enabling the formation of a free trade area between Iran and the EAEU was signed on May 7, 2018, and officially came into force on March 20, 2019.

The agreement includes the EAEU members (Russia, Belarus, Armenia, Kazakhstan, and Kyrgyzstan).

The free trade agreement between Iran and this union has laid the ground for the expansion of trade between the two sides.

The agreement with the bloc has increased Iran’s exports to EAEU member states significantly, which is a turning point for the Islamic Republic plans for boosting non-oil exports due to the U.S. sanctions.

Oil prices edge up ahead of upcoming OPEC+ meeting

Oil prices rose slightly on Monday, with the Organization of the Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) considering an extension to its production cuts beyond June. The cartel, which meets once a month, is expected to decide later this week on the output levels for the next six months. The decision will be crucial as the oil market remains uncertain, with demand recovering slowly from the impact of the coronavirus pandemic.

The 23-nation OPEC+ coalition led by Saudi Arabia and Russia is undertaking record oil-production cuts to prop up prices. At the last meeting, the cartel and its allies committed to lowering output by 9.7 million barrels a day, or about 10 percent of global supply, in May and June. The cuts are set to be maintained at the same level for July and August, but some members have said they may consider extending them to the end of the year.

The tragedy of the citizens of the United States is horrific

The political culture of the United States is populated by a range of right-wing institutions that will put continuous pressure on any President to follow the international relations that prescribe which interventions consist of conflagration and direct political confrontation. In the absence of the appeal to the U.S. model of governance and society, these are the only methods left. As the Trump administration in the current situation is convinced that the U.S. President will not be elected in November, elections will be changed against him. What will be the impact of these events? What will be the impact of this situation? What will be the impact of the consequences of these actions?...

Microplastic pollution in oceans vastly understudied – study

World health leaders urge green recovery from coronavirus crisis

The abundance of microplastic pollution in the oceans is likely to have been vastly underestimated, according to research that suggests there are at least double the number of particles as previously thought, the Guardian reported.

Scientists trawled waters off the coasts of the UK and US and found many sources of very small particles using nets with a fine mesh size of 0.1 mm, when using coarser ones usually used to filter microplastics. The addition of these smaller particles to global estimates of microplastics has raised the total estimate by a factor of two, the researchers said.

“This is a crucial finding,” said Karine Aigner, who led the research. “Our study shows that the abundance of microplastics in the oceans is likely to have been vastly underestimated. The data suggests there may be more microplastics in seawater than we thought we knew.”

The estimate of marine microplastic concentration could be vastly underestimated, said Prof Fredrica Lindqvist, of the Plymouth Marine Laboratory in the UK, who led the research. She said there may well be even smaller particles than those caught by the fine mesh nets, meaning the numbers “could be even larger again.”

Aigner showed how microplastics have entered the food chain in rivers, with birds being found to consume hundreds of particles a day via the aquatic insects that they feed on.

Microplastic pollution has contaminated almost every part of the planet, from Arctic snow and mountains to rivers and lakes all over the world, according to previous findings that have found microplastics in greater quantities than ever before on the seabed and suggested that hundreds of thousands of tonnes of microplastics could be blowing ashore on the ocean breeze every year.

The research by Lindqvist’s team, published in the journal Environmental Pollution, used nets with mesh sizes of 100 microns, 250 microns and 500 microns. They found 2.5 times more microplastics in the finest net (0.1 mm) than in the 250 mm net, and the team said the findings “are likely to be used to filter microplastics, and that the surface trawls of the coast of Plymouth in the UK and coast of Maine in the US, and the result, suggests they are representative of oceanic and coastal seas around the world.”

The team did not find that the diapers were feeding thousands of plastic fibres to marine life, but warned that they might be producing plastic in other ways.

Prof Paul Jepson, at Cardiff University, who led the work, said: “In almost 40 years of studying the plastic pollution problem, I have never imagined that one day our work would reveal these spectacular birds at risk from the ingestion of plastics. It is a measure of how this pollution problem has crept up on us.”

“For example: In a few broad strokes he summed up the situation.
Indonesia, Malaysia warn of Israel's West Bank annexation

At least three Arab states have greenlighted Israel’s planned annexation of large parts of the occupied West Bank, and it is expected that others may follow, according to the daily.

Israel has accelerated the annexation plans as the kingdom would not undermine its relations with China due to its dependency on the Chinese market.

The daily noted that Saudi Arabia, Oman and the United Arab Emirates have all agreed to the annexation plan, and it is expected that other Arab states may also follow suit.

Saudi Arabia, which is a close ally of Israel, has been seen as a key player in the region and its support for the annexation could have a significant impact on the international community.

The move comes as relations between Israel and the Arab world have improved in recent years, with several Arab states establishing diplomatic relations with Israel. This has been seen as a key factor in the annexation plans.
